Jeffrey Wright
Public Service Assistant

Jeffrey brings more than 20 years of experience analyzing demographic and economic data to the Institute faculty. As a demographer, he develops population estimates and projections involving Georgia’s rapidly changing population to better inform policymaking at the state and local government levels. He recently completed doctoral studies in applied demography at the University of Texas at San Antonio and has worked with the Texas State Demographer and the U.S. Census Bureau and as a journalist in Mexico analyzing economic data. Since joining the Institute in March, Jeffrey has led classes to enhance city and county leaders’ understanding of demographics and the census, and contributed to the Institute’s Census 2020 outreach collaboration with the Georgia Department of Community Affairs.
